Can kindness be strategic? Bradley Stokes-Bennett was a UVic student in 2001 when he and three buddies decided to change the world with random (and not-so-random) acts of kindness. They even wrote books about it! In 2015, Dr. Stacey Fitzsimmons made kindness a class assignment in the business course.

Leading People and Organizations.
Amit Dewett was one of Dr. Fitzsimmons’s students in that class.
On Wednesday, March 9, from 4:30-6 pm, Brad, Stacey and Amit will talk about their experiences with kindness. Can it be strategic? Should it? What happens when you try to make it so? Can it make the world a better place?

Please join us for this entertaining and enlightening discussion!

International Women’s Day, March 8, 2016, is a global day celebrating the social, economic, cultural and political achievements of women. The day also marks a call to action for accelerating gender parity.

Digital literacy and parity
Ladies Learning Code is a not-for-profit group with the mission to be the leading resource for women and youth to become passionate builders - not just consumers - of technology by learning technical skills in a hands-on, social, and collaborative way. CSSI can attest to the awesomeness of their digital literacy workshops. Learn more about the group and events near you.

Executive equity
According to a study by the German Institute for Economic Research (DIW Berlin), a balanced representation of women and men in Germany’s corporate leadership roles is still a long way off. Women executive barometer 2016: Percentage of women among major companies’ top-level positions hardly increases describes the findings of an analysis of more than 500 companies. Some are setting a good example while others are lagging behind, but the vast majority of companies have yet to meet the 30-percent quota for women on supervisory boards.
