In general, materials on the Internet can be used freely or for educational or training purposes. You should check the materials that states: "This copy is made solely for your personal use for research, private study, or criticism of the material." Such material may be considered "fair use". More detailed information is available on the "Terms of Use" or "Legal Notes" section to confirm. Images used should always be properly cited. Reports and Papers may be considered "fair use" if done without securing permission from the copyright owner.

A Library Database?

The University of Victoria licenses many electronic resources for its staff, faculty, and current students, including indexes, databases, e-books, and journals. Linking to these resources is preferable.

Public Domain?

An author's work is protected by copyright for a term that is generally measured by the life of the author plus fifty years. If the author has been dead for more than 50 years, the work moves into the public domain.

Unpublished Course Notes

If you are the sole author, and the work has not been published elsewhere under a limiting agreement, you are the copyright holder and may use it as you please. If you are not the copyright holder, you must obtain permission from the copyright holder.
