Is This Article in Full Text?

If you have an article citation, here’s a quick way to determine whether it is available in full text. If it is not, distance education students can request the material from Infoline at Infoline@uvic.ca.

1. Go to the Libraries web page http://www.uvic.ca/library and enter the article title in the Search everything box. This searches Summon which includes most, (but not all) of UVic’s full text journal content.

2. If there’s a match, click on the article title. The yellow sun icon indicates full text should be available. Follow the links to navigate through to the text.

3. If the article you’re looking for is not found in Summon, try Google Scholar. Make sure you access Google Scholar via the Library web site to access Library subscriptions and avoid requests for payment.

UVic distance education students who can’t find the full text of an article are welcome to contact Infoline@uvic.ca for assistance. 25 February 2014
Is This Article in Full Text?

4. Enter your Netlink ID and password if/when prompted to do so.

Enter the article title in the search box.

5. If there’s a match, click on the title to navigate through to the full text of the article.

6. If clicking on the title leads to screens asking for payment, go back to your results list and look for the Get this @ UVic link.

7. Get this will check for other full text providers & list all of them in case one isn’t working.

Follow the links to navigate through to the text.

UVic distance education students who can’t find the full text of an article are welcome to contact Infoline@uvic.ca for assistance.

25 February 2014