Director's Message

 ${f I}$ n the summer of 2003 CAPI celebrates its 16th anniversary as the University's first interdisciplinary research centre, marking the end of a very busy year. CAPI, if you will, was "rebranded" this year, as we adopted new colours, redesigned our website and resolved to improve and expand our communication with our readers, supporters and Associates. Perhaps your first sense of our efforts came with our Spring 2003 $Asia-Pacific\ News$ and the confirmation with this freshly designed Annual Report. Cosmetic changes perhaps, but determinedly reflective of a new energy and commitment in the Centre's programs both on and off campus.

This year CAPI brought not one but two distinguished Lam Visitors to Victoria to provide leadoff public lectures for major conferences: Sir Hugh Kawharu from Auckland and Dwight Perkins from Harvard, dealing with the Maori Treaty Process and West China Development Strategies respectively. Our Research Roundtables brought research-in-progress to campus audiences and a good number of lunch hours were turned into learning experiences through the appreciated efforts of our Brown Bag presenters. Our Conferences on Japanese Multicultural Identities, West China Development and Vietnam's Legal Culture were well received, attracting hundreds of scholars and interested citizens from over 20 countries. Our responsibility, as always, is to publish the best papers from our seminars and conferences and the immediate results of those efforts over the past year may be seen in CAPI's latest publications, featured elsewhere in this report.

The efforts of two special visitors are happily acknowledged, beginning with Dr. Lu Ding from the National University of Singapore, a widely published economist who invested boundless energy into our China Program in many on-campus lectures and his co-direction, greatly helped by Heidi Tyedmers, of our mega conference on West China Development. Bui Thi Bich Lien, our first Vietnamese visitor, soon connected with the sizable Vietnamese law and society community on and off campus and provided marvellous support to me in organizing our Vietnam Legal Culture Symposium that was co-sponsored by the University of Washington Asian Law Centre and the Centre for Southeast Asian Studies. As you will read about in the coming pages, CAPI has also been very actively engaged in our two CIDA-funded international projects in Vietnam and Cambodia over the past year. Both projects provide excellent opportunities for CAPI's ongoing work in the region and will continue to expand the profile of CAPI and UVic in Southeast Asia over the next several years.

CAPI is a small unit by any measure but if you will check our website we are blessed with an amazingly productive and collegial staff group — Stella Chan, Helen Lansdowne and Heidi Tyedmers. It will come as no surprise to those who have worked with Stella, an original staff member of CAPI, that she was nominated this year by campus colleagues for the President's Staff Service Award.

Dr. Joe Kess runs our Japan Program, out-producing units with three times the resources. I have the honour of serving as both the Director and Law Chair. We draw insight and inspiration from the efforts of our Research Fellows, Dr. Hiroko Noro and Dr. Radhika Desai and our student volunteers. Under the initiative of Helen Lansdowne, we started our Student Internship Program this year, with three of our brightest UVic students heading off to work with NGO's in Bangkok in 2003.

In the coming year, we will be much concerned with 'renewal' realities as a new China Program Chair, a new Law Chair and a new Director will be selected, each to take up their duties in July 2004. In the interim, two China Program visitors will arrive in September and January respectively. Details of their programs were being finalized at the time of writing.

We thank our Executive Committee members for their counsel and direction, our External Advisers and Associates for their support and assistance and Vice-President Martin Taylor for his thoughtful advice throughout this very eventful year.

(API's Mission and Objectives

CAPI was established in 1987 as an important element of the University of Victoria's plan to expand and strengthen its links with universities and other institutions in the Asia-Pacific region, especially with China, Japan, Southeast Asia, Korea, and the developing island states of the Southwest Pacific.

The Centre's primary mandate is to conduct and facilitate research on policy issues related to the Asia-Pacific region. In addition, the Centre serves as a regional research facility to the University and to the larger community.

More specifically, CAPI was established to fulfill six functions:

T o serve as a clearing house for the collection and dissemination of information regarding activities on campus, and in the community;

To provide a forum for the exchange of ideas and information among interested persons at the University, and to organize and publicize visits by specialists and other visitors with Asia-Pacific expertise;

 $To\ promote\ publication\ and\ public\ information\ activities\ appropriate\ to\ the\ University;$

T o organize and conduct short and medium-term teaching, training and research projects;

 $To\ organize\ and\ administer\ long-term,\ cross-disciplinary\ programs\ in\ collaboration\ with\ other\ relevant\ groups\ and\ institutions,\ on\ and\ off\ campus;\ and$

 $\boldsymbol{T}\boldsymbol{o}$ participate in networks of organizations and individuals sharing similar goals and interests.

Vietnam Legal Reform Assistance Project (LERAP)

In June 2002 CAPI was very pleased to learn that our bid to CIDA for a five year legal assistance project partnered with the Ministry of Justice in Vietnam was successful. CAPI is the lead contributor of specialist legal expertise in the project and is part of a four member consortium involving Bearing Point LP, trade lawyer Mark Sills of Fasken Martineau DuMoulin LLP, and trade economist Murray Smith of Ticon Holdings Inc.

For the past decade, CAPI, in the person of its Law Chair and Director, Bill Neilson, has been heavily involved in legal assistance, legal education and research projects in Vietnam. This work will now intensify as the first activities under this five million dollar CIDA-supported project are set in motion.

With activities starting in 2003, this Project will focus on strengthening the professional capacity of the Ministry of Justice to handle three significant legal change issues facing Vietnam:

- (1) the legislative compliance realities exacted by Vietnam's increasing regional and international economic integration, particularly its accession application to the WTO;
- (2) the pressing need, common to many transitional economies, to improve civil judgment execution, thereby encouraging a greater confidence in the justice system; and
- (3) the connected need for an improved capacity in comparative law analysis to ensure that foreign law models are properly analyzed for their suitability and adaptability to Vietnam's legal conditions.

Professor Neilson is directing the comparative law analysis part of the project, co-managing the civil judgment part and serves overall as the chief legal services advisor to the Project while Assistant Director, Helen Lansdowne, assumes senior management responsibilities as the Project's Technical Services Coordinator. UVic Associate Law Librarian, Caron Rollins, and UVic Distinguished Law Professor, Gerry Ferguson, are also principal contributors to the comparative law part of the project, along with colleagues from McGill and Ottawa Universities.

Through this period CAPI has been actively engaged in helping to prepare the Project Implementation Plan, which will chart the course of the project in detail through the coming years. Professor Neilson helped to carry out the Project's Inception Mission in October 2002. The WTO component started first in February 2003. Then, in June 2003, after waiting out SARS travel complications, Professor Neilson directed separate baseline studies with Caron Rollins and Don Rose, formerly of the BC Ministry of the Attorney General, of the Vietnamese Ministry's Institute of Legal Research and the Department of Judgment Management, respectively. A full slate of Project activities, in both Canada and Vietnam, will follow in the remainder of this calendar year.

Cambodia-Canada Legislative Support Project (CCLSP)

Over the past year, the Centre for Asia-Pacific Initiatives, along with its partner, the Parliamentary Centre in Ottawa, has been actively involved in Cambodia delivering technical assistance for the Cambodia-Canada Legislative Support Project. This bilateral, CIDA funded, five-year, 4.5 million dollar project is directed at building the capacity of the National Assembly and Senate of Cambodia and their respective Secretariats.

The CAPI arm of the program has particular responsibilities for enhancing the capacity of the Parliament and the Secretariats to effectively review, monitor and supervise government legislative proposals, including public consultation and education. In September 2002 and January 2003, CAPI Director Bill Neilson and Assistant Director Helen Lansdowne delivered a series of workshops in Phnom Penh resulting in the publication, inter alia, of Rule of Law Norms Guidelines for Cambodian Legislators, Principles of Gender Impact Analysis of Draft Legislation, and Staff Legislation Briefing Note Template. These three documents will form the first chapters of the Projects' Parliamentary Practices Handbook.

In the coming year, CAPI's work will focus on online legislative analysis assignments and a Canadian Study Tour prepared and organized for selected legal staff in the two Secretariats. As well, orientation sessions for the newly elected Members of Parliament will be conducted in the Fall of 2003.

Governance & Economic Law Development in Southeast Asia

William Neilson Director and CAPI Law Chair

T he CAPI Law Program concentrated on the development, management and initial delivery of two major, five year, legal reform projects in Cambodia and Vietnam, both won in CIDA competitions against other national contenders, and partnered with Cambodia's Parliament and Vietnam's Ministry of Justice, respectively.

In March, the Symposium on "Mapping Vietnam's Legal Culture" attracted legal experts from around the world. Publication of the proceedings is proposed for later this year, very possibly with the University of Washington Press while comparable efforts are underway to edit and publish, in English and Chinese, the proceedings of the equally successful West China Development Policy Conference, held earlier in the same month.

Program Director publications appeared in US and Australian journals and, for the third year, the direction and delivery of the Asia-Pacific Trade Law & Policy course in Chulalongkorn University's international LLM program was maintained.

Japan Program

CAPI's Japan Program has focused on positioning CAPI as a leading centre for Japan-related activities in Canada, and making this reputation widely known in Japan as well as in this country. To this end, conferences, symposia, and research projects have been initiated with a number of research centres, government and non-governmental agencies, and academic institutions in the field of Japanese studies. For example, the August 2002 conference on 'Changing Japanese Identities within Multicultural Canada' was an enormous success with over 200 participants, and financial support as well as active participation from research foundations and both government and NGO agencies in both Japan and Canada. The published Proceedings of this conference will be available by summer 2003.

Another major conference is now in the planning and funding stages, namely, the Japan Studies Association of Canada (JSAC) annual meeting, which will hold its meetings under CAPI auspices in Victoria in October of 2004. Those meetings are particularly timely, given that they celebrate the 75th anniversary of the establishment of a diplomatic presence for Canada in Japan, as well as the 100th anniversary of our establishing a trade commission there. Not surprisingly, there has been considerable interest in our hosting these meetings for that anniversary year, and a number of government agencies and academic institutions have already expressed their desire to be included. The Japan Program Chair has also been invited by the Nihon Kanada Gakkai (the Japanese Association of Canadian Studies) to take part in their symposium at the Tokyo Embassy marking the same anniversary early in that year, and that Association has also promised to send a representative panel to participate in the Victoria JSAC meetings. A third symposium is planned by our sister university in Kyoto, Doshisha University, and the Japan Program Chair has also been asked to participate in that setting.

A number of research projects are underway or nearing completion. A continuing collaboration arising from earlier work on psycholinguistic dimensions of the mental dictionary with the National Institute for the Japanese Language has now begun to focus on two topics to do with cognitive mechanisms which enhance quick access to information in Japanese; the first of these has to do with internet access for Japanese research and the second has to do with marketing considerations of word recognition and brand names. The Japan Program Chair has also been asked to serve as an external advisor for a newly initiated project at the Center of Excellence for Studies of the Humanities Interface at Osaka University. Lastly, Drs. Kess and Noro have just finished a grant on 'The Role of Japanese as a Heritage Language in Constructing the Japanese-Canadian Identity in British Columbia', as a federallyfunded Metropolis project on Research on Immigration and Integration into the Metropolis, and attended both the Global Diversity Conference at the East-West Center at the University of Hawaii and the National Metropolis Conference in Edmonton to report on this work.

Papers and publications by the Japan Program Chair include the editing of the 54-chapter Proceedings from the conference on 'Changing Japanese Identities within Multicultural Canada', together with Hiroko Noro, Midge Ayukawa, and Helen Lansdowne, in addition to one book chapter, one proceedings contribution, and four scholarly presentations (three at learned meetings and one in a university setting).

Asian Nationalism Project

From Developmental to Cultural Nationalism in Asia?

It is fashionable to suggest that globalization spells the end of the nation state and makes nationalisms more and more difficult to sustain (e.g. Anderson 1996; Hobsbawm 1996). On a certain intuitive, but ultimately wrong understanding of what globalization entails, this makes sense. However, as more discerning commentators argue (Panitch 1998, 2000), states remain central to the task of constructing the international, regional and national architecture of globalization. Asian states seem as vigorous and active in the era of globalization as ever, and nor do Asian nationalisms show any signs of decline.

These are nationalisms of a new type. Whereas through most of the 20th century, nationalisms in Asia were pitted against colonialism, semi-colonialism or Communism and emphasized developmental matters, today's Asian nationalisms tend to be preoccupied with issues of identity, whether religious, ethnic or cultural. "Asian Values", "Hindutva", "Confucianism" and "Nihonjinron", and a variety of complex intermeshings of national identity mixed with Islamism, define the new resurgent nationalisms.

With the support of CAPI, and along with a major SSHRC grant (and matching funds from UVic) Dr. Desai aims through this project, to explore issues of Asian nationalism, particularly in the age of the War on Terrorism. The first segment of the project will consist of a two day workshop on October 3 and 4, 2003 featuring contributions from outstanding scholars from across Asia. This workshop will be opened by eminent historian Dr. Romila Thapar presenting the distinguished Lam Lecture on October 2, 2003.

A second workshop will be held in October 2004 to critically discuss and coordinate the results of the new research. One of the chief research outcomes of this project will be the development of a new comparative approach to studying Asian nationalism and assessing its implications for the future of Asia and for world politics in the 21st century. These research advances will be complied into a volume of articles written by the contributors to the project. In addition to this, a set of teaching materials and methods will be developed along with a permanent interactive website to service a world-wide network of scholars focused on Asia. Finally, radio and TV news and documentary programming based on the workshops, and special interviews aimed at the general public will make a direct contribution to public awareness and understanding of the subject.

Japanese Canadian Identity Project

Hapa Japanese Canadian Identity: An Exploratory Study of Identity Formation for Interracial Japanese Canadian Children

Today, Japanese Canadians, including descendents of prewar Japanese immigrants, postwar Japanese immigrants and recently arrived Japanese immigrants marry outside of their ethnic community at an unprecedented rate. This new group of "Japanese Canadian" born from interracial unions can be called hapa. Hapa comes from the Hawaiian phrase hapa haole which literally means "half white and half foreigner". Once considered derogatory, it is now a common and empowering self identification tool for the people of partial Asian or Pacific Islander ancestry. Many argue that a common hapa identity is less rooted in the physical appearance or the culture an individual most identifies with, but is more rooted in the experience, parental upbringing and where an individual grew up.

The object of this pilot research project is two-fold: To explore the hapa identity of interracial Japanese Canadian children attending a Japanese heritage language school in British Columbia and to chart the role of Japanese as a heritage language in consolidating hapa identity among these children. To date, the data collection phase of the research project is complete and analysis of the data is ongoing. Preliminary findings indicate that there are two key factors at play in language maintenance and ethnic identity development: 1) locality and 2) family dynamics. Findings from this project will be presented at the 17th Biennial Conference of the Canadian Ethnic Studies Association in Banff, Alberta in October 2003.

Student Internship Program

CAPI's International Internship Program for students was launched in November 2002 with the first CAPI interns arriving in their placements in Spring 2003. This exciting new program was created in recognition of the fact that students are increasingly turning to the field of international development as a potential area for future employment, a field that requires not only academic credentials but also practical experience. CAPI's internships will not only allow students to apply what they have learned and to gain some "on the job" experience, but will also give them a step up in the increasingly competitive job market.

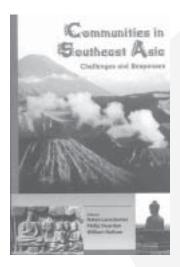

CAPI's internship program offers students the opportunity to work with non-governmental organizations in developing countries in the Asia-Pacific region for a period of four to eight months. The program looks after all of the basic expenses associated with the internship including travel costs and a basic allowance for accommodation and food. While the key focus of the program is to offer young people valuable international work experience, CAPI also recognizes that research opportunities, network building, and language training are also significant benefits that the interns will derive through participation in the program. Host organizations also benefit by having a talented and energetic young person join their team for a few months

In this inaugural year, CAPI received a significant number of highly competitive applications from UVic students (both graduate and undergraduate) with an interest in the Asia-Pacific region. After an extensive recruitment and selection process, three exceptional interns were selected in December 2002. Joanna Wong, a fourth year student in Pacific and Asian Studies and Journalism, Shane Barter, a fourth year student in Political Science and History and Kate Vallance, a third year student in Pacific and Asian Studies make up the first group of CAPI interns.

A series of orientation sessions were held for the interns through March 2003 and included sessions on culture shock, living overseas, risk management, workplace readiness, as well as a detailed orientation to the host organization and country. CAPI's interns were also provided with an in-depth briefing session on Thailand by CAPI Associate Isabel Lloyd who has worked extensively in Thailand and Southeast Asia for well over a decade. Kate Vallance arrived in her placements with the Asian Regional Resource Centre for Human Rights Education in April 2003, and Shane Barter arrived in his placement with Forum Asia in May 2003. CAPI's third intern, Joanna Wong will be heading to her placement with the Foundation for Child Development in September 2003.

CAPI is very pleased to be able to provide this valuable overseas experience to some of our most talented UVic students who are specializing in the Asia-Pacific region, and hope to be able to expand this program in the coming years. To learn more about CAPI's Student Internship Program and our interns please visit our website at www.capi.uvic.ca.

Post-Suharto Era in Indonesia

By Seno Gumira Ajidarma Translated and Introduced by Michael H. Bodden

 T his collection of stories, essays, and a play by Indonesian writer Seno Gumira Ajidarma, offers us a Dante-esque tour through the hell of the final days of the Suharto regime and the disappointing purgatory of the ensuing "Reform Era". While displaying Seno's virtuosity and diverse talents, these works also point a powerful and, at times, grim portrait of the impact of the end of the Suharto years and their immediate aftermath on many Indonesians.

Changing Japanese Identities in Multicultural Canada

An International Conference hosted by CAPI from August 22 to 24, 2002

f I n August of 2002, leading Japanese-Canadians, international scholars, governmental and non-governmental officials and others gathered at the University of Victoria for a conference on `Changing Japanese Identities in Multicultural Canada.' This international, interdisciplinary conference explored the experiences and contributions of Japanese-Canadians and the construction and evolution of Japanese identities in changing national and international contexts. Nearly 100 speakers participated in 27 panels dealing with a vast range of topics including: Japanese immigration to Canada and the Japanese experience in Canada; Japanese-Canadian oral histories; Multiculturalism, ethnicity, and identity; Women's issues and images of Japanese women; Cultural retention and heritage language maintenance; Images of Japan and the Japanese in artistic expression; Cultural, economic and political relations between Canada and Japan; The impact of Japan's changing identity on Canada. Dr. Roy Miki, prominent Japanese-Canadian author and scholar, delivered the keynote address, 'Inside History: The Shifting Boundaries of "Japanese Canadian" as an Identity Formation'. The conference, organized by Midge Ayukawa, Hiroko Noro, and Joseph F. Kess and hosted by the Centre for Asia-Pacific Initiatives received support from a wide variety of sources, among them the Japan Foundation, the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, and the Aboriginal, Immigration and Multicultural Programs Division of the Ministry of Community, Aboriginal and Women's Services in the Province of British Columbia, the National Association of Japanese Canadians, and the Victoria Nikkei Cultural Society. A volume of Conference Proceedings, entitled 'Changing Japanese Identities and Multicultural Canada' is currently being published and will be available through CAPI.

West China Development Conference

An International Conference hosted by CAPI from March 6 to 8, 2003

This international, multidisciplinary Conference attracted over 60 scholars, policy-makers and development practitioners from universities and institutions in China, Australia, Canada, France, India, Hong Kong, Singapore, and the United States. The Conference was opened with the distinguished Lam Lecture on the evening of March 6, featuring Dwight Perkins, the Harold Hitchings Burbank Professor of Political Economy at Harvard University. Professor Perkins' speech entitled, "Designing a Regional Development Strategy for China" provided intellectual inspiration for the remainder of the Conference.

Over the following two days more than 30 papers were presented in seven sessions focusing on: the Dynamics of Regional Development, Economic Geography, Human Security and Regional Impact, Human Capital and Poverty Alleviation, the Environment, Urban Rural Development and Regional Disparity. Some of the presenters and keynote speakers included: Wing Thye Woo, Department of Economics, University of California, Davis and Special Advisor, East Asian Economies, United Nations Millennium Project, Hou Yongzhi, Department of Development Strategy and Regional Economy, Development Research Centre of the State Council, PRC, Gregory Chin, China Program, Canadian International Development Agency, and Zheng Yuxin, Centre for Environment and Development, Chinese Academy of Social Science, PRC.

A CD Rom containing all of the Conference papers was distributed to participants along with their Conference Programs, and the edited Conference Proceedings published by World Scientific Publishing will be available in 2004. Generous support for this event came from the Canadian International Development Agency, the International Development Research Centre and the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada.

Vietnam Legal Culture Symposium

An Invitational Symposium hosted by CAPI from March 27 to 29, 2003

This Symposium provided a unique opportunity for a small group of Vietnam law specialists from Canada, the United States, Australia, Sweden, Vietnam and elsewhere in Southeast Asia to present papers and engage in roundtable discussions on the present state and future directions of Vietnam's fast-evolving legal system. The Symposium aimed to answer some of the following questions: Are there legal answers to combating corruption, a priority concern identified in Article 8 of the 2002 amendments to the 1992 Constitution? How can we best judge the record of foreign legal assistance programs in Vietnam? What is the meaning of 'socialist legality' in post-doi moi Vietnam? Some of the participants in the program included: Hy Van Luong, Asian Institute, University of Toronto, John Gillespie, Deakin University, Australia, Pip Nicholson, University of Melbourne, Australia, Per Bergling, University of Umea, Sweden, Thaveeporn Vasavakul, Visiting Scholar, Yale University, Pham Duy Nghia, Hanoi National University, Vietnam and Bui Thi Bich Lien, Hanoi Law University and Visiting CAPI Law Associate 2002-03. Selected papers from the Symposium are currently being edited for publication. The Vietnam Legal Culture Symposium was co-sponsored by the Asian Law Center and the Southeast Asia Studies Center both at the University of Washington.

"Thank you for the invitation to your stimulating conference [on Vietnam Legal Culture]...I was much taken by UVic and beautiful Victoria..."

-John Gillespie, School of Law Deakin University, Australia

CAPI Student Symposium

Gender, Sexuality, and Identity: Women in the Asia-Pacific Region

This Symposium was organized and hosted by CAPI's Student Committee on March 25, 2003 and drew in over 20 students, faculty members and members of the public. The evening event started with Dr. Lisa Mitchell, of the Department of Anthropology, presenting some of the findings of her current research in the Central Philippines in a talk entitled: "Body Image and Desire Among Filipina Girls in Negros Occidental". Following this, Ms Helen Lansdowne gave a presentation entitled "Reflections on the World of Women in Cambodia" based on her observations on Cambodian women as a member of the Cambodia-Canada Legislative Support Project. The evening was ended with a presentation by Jo-Anne Lee and Eugenie Lam from the Women's Studies Department at UVic. This talk entitled: "Bubble Tea, Lotteria and Me: Sometimes I Don't Feel Asian/Chinese Enough" centred on the findings of a recent research study on racialized girls and social cohesion in Victoria.

"CAPI did a first rate job on the "China Western Development" conference. The organizers created a wonderful atmosphere for relevant and strategic thinking on China's western development..."

-Gregory Chin, Senior Development Officer, China Programme, CIDA
