

University of Victoria

GRADUATE COLLOQUIUM

DEPARTMENT OF ANTHROPOLOGY

Phenotyping & evolutionary genomics: what we can learn from studying hair morphology

Tina Lasisi

Penn State University

Department of Anthropology

Monday, January 25th, 2021

11:30 am – 12:30 pm

Online – via Zoom

(zoom meeting link on the website)

www.uvic.ca/socialsciences/anthropology/research/colloquium/index.php

This talk will explore how a closer look at variation in scalp hair morphology exemplifies the true complexity of human diversity. Using computational image analysis, we can look at hair variation without invoking racialized terms or relying on subjective descriptions of hair. The implications of these findings will be discussed in the broader context of the importance of phenotyping in evolutionary genomics.

EVERYONE WELCOME

www.uvic.ca/socialsciences/anthropology/research/colloquium/index.php