Interested in engaging community in your research but unsure where to start? Come learn about recent and ongoing community-based research projects and innovative research tools from community members, academics and students. Case study presentations and a panel discussion will cover themes ranging from participatory waste management, climate change and community building to livelihoods, social and cultural revitalization and sustainability. Find out why community-based research is quickly gaining recognition as an important tool for addressing complex environmental, health and social issues.

For more information about events go to: uvic.ca/ideafest
NOT YOUR TRADITIONAL COMMUNITY-BASED RESEARCH CONVERSATIONS

MARCH 7 | 1:00–3:00 PM | CLEARIHUE BUILDING D132

Interested in engaging community in your research but unsure where to start? Come learn about recent and ongoing community-based research projects from community members, academics and students. Case study presentations and a panel discussion will cover themes ranging from participatory waste management, climate change and community building to livelihoods, social and cultural revitalization and sustainability. Find out why community-based research is quickly gaining recognition as an important tool for addressing complex environmental, health and social issues.

For more information about events go to: uvic.ca/ideafest

Tereza Felipe da Costa, National Waste Pickers’ movement, São Paulo Brazil. Photo credit: Jutta Gutherlet