

Proper Uses of Computer Science accounts:

Use of your computing account is a privilege to be exercised responsibly. In accepting an account issued by the Department of Computer Science, you are agreeing:

1. You are responsible for all activity on your account.
2. You will not tamper with the operating system security or accounting nor disguise your identity while using the system.
3. You will not permit any other individual to use your account.
4. You will not interfere with other users nor attempt to obtain access to another account.
5. You will not permit processes to accumulate excessive amounts of compute time or resources.
6. You will not modify the system configuration or install or save software other than programs you create as part of your course work.
7. You will not distribute or maintain material in violation of the university's Discrimination & Harassment Policy \(GV0205\).
8. You will not store or display inappropriate items (for example: pornography).
9. You will not store large files that are unrelated to course work, for example: MP3 files, image files, etc.)
10. You will not copy proprietary software.
11. You will not use your computing privileges for commercial gain.
