Why? Because violence against women is THE most pressing issue facing our communities today!

Response-Based (R/B) Practice is the focus of this conference. This practice grew out of direct service with victims and perpetrators of violence and their families, and is now used internationally in diverse practice settings, as a guide to research and public policy, and as a basis for coordinating community and criminal justice responses to interpersonal violence.

This conference is for practitioners from:

- women’s shelters and transition houses
- mental health and social justice organizations
- social services, criminal justice, victim services
- treatment programs for victims and offenders
- anyone with a vested interest in promoting social justice

This conference will:

- provide ideas for intervention in diverse settings
- encourage discussion of organized social responses to domestic violence
- connect colleagues across practice settings
- present the key tenets and methods of response-based practice and research on the connection between violence and language
