

Grandmothers Caring for their Grandchildren Research Project

Leslie Brown, Barb Whittington, Pat MacKenzie, Marilyn Callahan, Gayle Ployer.

This three-year research project (2001-2004) is funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada. The goal of our project is to collect the stories of grandmothers who are raising their grandchildren on a full or part time basis. While there has been limited research on this topic, some previous studies have found that when parents are unable to raise their children, they often turn to their families to provide care for their children. Grandmothers are frequently the family members who provide this care. Some of the previous research (see our selected bibliography) cites studies that document and describe the family situations that lead to the involvement of grandmothers in this work.
