Professor Rodríguez Garrido, one of Perú's leading scholars, is an internationally renowned student of the literature of colonial Latin America. His research has fundamentally changed our understanding of the controversial seventeenth-century Mexican nun Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz, an early feminist and one of the most important poets and playwrights of the Hispanic world. His reflections on the theatre of the Peruvian Peralta Barnuevo will counterpoint the discussion of Sor Juana, allowing us to more fully comprehend the affinities and differences between the literary cultures of Latin America.
