Conference Program

Security’s Impact on Border Policies

Friday March 30, and
Saturday March 31, 2012

Laurel Point Inn Hotel
Victoria, BC

Center For Global Studies
This event was made possible thanks to:

The Center For Global Studies and the European Studies Program at the University of Victoria, British Columbia, Canada,
The European Union Center of Excellence Universities of Toronto and Victoria,
The offices of VP Research, Dean of Social Science, Humanities, Human and Social and Development and the Office of International Affairs at the University of Victoria.
This workshop is an invitation to reflect on the impact of security policies on other border policies and perceptions: looking at policies including clandestine crossing, diplomacy, energy, environmental policy, governance, human rights, immigration, private property, monetary policy, resource management, trade, violence, vigilantism, water ..., and perception with broad overview talks and media/popular perceptions.

Since 9/11 security issues have been at the forefront of border policy developments both in Europe and North America. The European Union (EU) member states and the North American states (Canada, Mexico and the United States) have, however, responded in a fundamentally different fashion. The European experience within the EU is largely influenced by its regional policy, with its tradition of local level and intergovernmental networks and policy-making practices, but also by a need to secure both internal and international borders in a manner coherent with pre-existing policies of partnership and cooperation. The resulting international border security policies engage bordering states on issues of economic development and security matters, while internal security is increasingly the co-production of large networks of territorial and functional governments and organizations concerned with shared security across all twenty-seven member-states. In North America, Canada and Mexico have been subjected to alignment pressures from the United States. Border security perspectives are primarily informed by the United States (US) administration’s understanding of criminal and immigration issues on its southern border that, in turn, is subject to considerable demographic and market pressures. This then, leads to attempts to unify policy answers to vast and regionally varied borderlands.

Our goal is a daylong workshop on the impact of security on other border policies, and media and popular perceptions.

We are asking you to prepare a 15/18 - minutes talk and draft a 6 to 8,000 words paper addressing issues of changes in policy due to the increased securitization of the border. The paper would have to look at data since 9/11 and just before, i.e. the last 10 years only and would address specific changes such as demographic, geopolitical or socio-economic changes that would have occurred since 9/11 in your area of border or borderland policy study i.e. Europe, North America, Korea, China or Myanmar. Please send your papers to Marina Vespoli before March 25 for distribution during the workshop.

Also, we are preparing a proposal for a refereed publication either with a university press or a scholarly journal. This workshop is made possible thanks to funding from the European Union, EUCE University of Toronto and University of Victoria.
