DIVERSITY, INDIGENEITY, AND CULTURAL COMPLEXITY:
An experiential approach to questions of power, privilege, and intersectional identities

An international short-term summer institute in cooperation between University of Victoria (UVic), Canada and University College UCC, Copenhagen, Denmark.

The institute will be held at UVic in Victoria, Canada from July 30 to August 17, 2018.
General Information

The 2018 International Summer Institute on Diversity, Indigeneity, and Cultural Complexity is a package of three interrelated courses that are intertwined through a mixture of lectures, hands-on experiences, and service learning:

Community and Culture (EDCI 451) 1.5 credits
Students will explore the roles, responsibilities, and impact they have as teachers in the transmission and transformation of culture in a diverse and culturally complex society.

Cultural Studies in Education (EDCI 452) 1.5 credits
Topics of study will include different conceptions of justice as they relate to education and learning, relations of power and privilege in school and community settings, intersectionality, and the effects of global systems on local communities.

Community Development Project (EDCI 456) 1.5 credits
Working in groups in community settings facilitated by faculty mentors, students will participate with community members in Indigenous and arts-based service learning projects that promote reciprocity and self-reflection.

Students from UVic, UCC, and other partner countries will cooperate in a joint international group on professional issues in educational and community settings. Together they will investigate constructions of knowledge, identities, social responsibility and dimensions of ethics, all related to professional work in a globalized and culturally complex world.

The institute will consist of an online preparatory week in late spring 2018, followed by a three-week stay at UVic from July 30 to August 17, 2018. During the three weeks, the students will work on the above-mentioned themes. They will participate in lectures, workshops, exercises, excursions, and service learning activities initiated by a team of professors from UVic and UCC. The objective is that by having the students cooperate on relevant and current cases from different countries, they will be able to mirror the complexity of the issues in the contexts in which they work.

Who is the institute for?
The Institute is for students, practicing teachers, and other participants who wish to engage in conversations about power, privilege, colonization, and oppression, and promote the creation of pathways to resist the status quo. Questions of culture and diversity in educational settings in complex societies will be discussed as well as the role of service learning as part of that complexity.

What are the objectives of the Institute?
The students will gain intercultural and contextual competencies in:
- Investigating issues concerning questions of power and privilege, social justice and empowerment, as well as questions of what constitutes cultural identity;
- Relating to and acting upon a background knowledge on complex understandings of intersectional identities in order to strengthen their discernment of these complexities and the responsibilities of their professional role;
- Preparing their future pupils to thrive in the globalized and diverse society in which the school/educational institution is embedded; and
- Applying theoretical knowledge of power structures, social justice, and intersectionality to practical situations through field experiences and service learning.

I have not only made new friends in a very short amount of time, but the presence of students from another country gives the course a greater depth.

Lea-Maria

I can confidently say that I have learned more in this 3-week intensive course than I have in many of my other full-term courses.

Cher

This course has helped me to become more aware of my own position and my responsibilities as a future teacher.

Johanne

The themes and topics from this course are so relevant to our personal and professional lives that I believe it will be one of those courses that I can continue to relate to and draw lessons from for many years after the course has finished.

Allana

Discussion provided me the opportunity to constantly challenge and question my own beliefs, values, and preconceptions and allowed me to consider how deeply embedded they are into my own culture.
