Transsystemic Law Series

Transsystemic Constitutional law

Professor John Borrows
University of Victoria - Faculty of Law

Tuesday Jan 19, 2021 09:00 am PST (Vancouver)

The University of Victoria follows a transsystemic method of teaching and thinking about law to educate across different legal orders, emphasize the relevance of Indigenous legal traditions to Canada, and contribute to understandings of law that are different from long-established legal views. In the second presentation of our Transsystemic Law Series, Professor John Borrows explained why a transsystemic approach to constitutional law contributes not only to understanding how different communities organize as distinctive political units, but also to giving Indigenous legal traditions equal footing with common and civil law traditions in Canada.
