Description

The TRC final report calls for greater recognition and use of Indigenous laws in Canada. Many Indigenous communities, justice system professionals and legal scholars are increasingly interested in accessing, understanding and applying Indigenous legal traditions today. Yet how to do this raises critical practical and theoretical questions. This highly interactive intensive seminar explores some of the current approaches related to these challenges. Students will identify and critically examine legal theories about the nature and sources of law, and reflect on collaborative legal research and the work of Indigenous law revitalization in inter-societal contexts. Students will have opportunities hear about, practice and evaluate methods for engaging with Indigenous legal traditions respectfully and robustly, and examine the major questions that arise from engagement in various settings. Students will also actively engage with specific Indigenous legal traditions, in a respectful and supportive environment.

Course Objectives/Outcomes:

- Students will explore the concept of law and the societal narratives about law and Indigenous peoples that impact our perceptions, understandings and expectations of law generally and Indigenous laws specifically.
- Students will identify and critically evaluate intellectual and practical challenges to recognizing and working with Indigenous laws today.
- Students will identify and critically evaluate various methods and resources for engaging with Indigenous laws.
- Students will build their capacity to apply one or more of the identified methods to ascertain Indigenous legal principles from a specific Indigenous legal tradition.
- Students will build their capacity to apply Indigenous legal principles to problem-solve practice fact scenarios.

Class Set Up

The TRC defines reconciliation as everyday practices of building and maintaining respectful relationships. This course is designed as an interactive seminar practicing professional etiquette, respectful engagement, and dialogue across legal orders and over differences on, at times, difficult, sensitive subjects and painful histories.

Course Evaluation:

- 40% - Research Methodology Portfolio (a mix of blog posts and article reflections)
- 10% - In-class attendance/class participation
- 50% - Final Take home assignment – Due date TBA (likely within 2 to 4 weeks of class end)
