ATTENDANCE: Faculty of Law Information

Students at the Faculty of Law are expected to attend regularly all classes of the courses in which they are enrolled and to avoid absences unless they have a good reason such as illness or family affliction. In some cases, regular attendance and participation may form part of the evaluation for a particular course, for example seminar courses. Attendance is also particularly important in all Pass/Fail courses.

If you find yourself in a position where you are regularly missing classes because of health or family considerations, or because part time work is necessary for financial or family reasons, you should consult the Associate Dean about the possibility of part time status.

Students who need to be absent for a lengthy period of time should advise the Associate Dean and their instructors; and should make every effort to keep up with their readings and course work.

The University of Victoria's policy regarding attendance applies to students registered in the Faculty of Law - <http://web.uvic.ca/calendar/FACS/UnIn/UARe/Atte.html>
