

(Be)longing on Campus: Jewish Experiences and Desired Futures in Higher Education

SCHOLARS
— IN THE SQUARE —

Rising antisemitism is a concern on university campuses around the globe, yet emerging studies of Jewish safety and inclusion remain largely survey-based, quantitative, and are less attentive to individual and localized experiences. My research helps fill this gap through qualitative, community-engaged research focused on the experience of being Jewish at UVic. In this talk, I introduce my project and its aims, reflect on some of the early questions and tensions surfacing in this work, and open a conversation about what a fuller sense of Jewish belonging in higher education might look like.

Erika Finestone is a Postdoctoral Fellow at UVic. Her research looks critically and curiously at kinship and the politics of recognition and refusal within state institutions.
