DIRECTOR'S NOTES Paul Bramadat

This has been a very good year, both because we have continued the tradition established decades ago of being a home for researchers and research, but also because recent successes have laid the groundwork for a very exciting future.

In November, we hosted a Festschrift to honour Dr. Andrew Rippin, a world-renowned Islamicist, former Dean at UVic, and a very dear friend of the CSRS. We planned to present the book to him at the event, but nature had its own plans, and he was too ill to attend. He passed away just days after the symposium. His absence meant that for his UVic friends and for others in the local community the event functioned as an impromptu celebration of his life. It was an honour for the CSRS to help the community to bear witness to the passing of this wonderful friend, colleague, and citizen. We were pleased, as well, that Dr. Gerald Hawting from the School of Oriental and African Studies in London, was able to provide an excellent keynote lecture.

Scholars associated with the CSRS have often addressed the philosophical, economic, social, theological, and cultural forces associated with the changing place of women both in religious communities and in the broader society. So, it was very stimulating to work with colleagues at the University of Calgary to create and host Women, Rights, and Religion. This international workshop took place here in August and included scholars from the US, Germany, Thailand, Canada, Australia, India, and Malaysia.

In March we hosted an Ideafest event dedicated to religion and spirituality in the "Cascadia bio-region," the area (generally) encompassing Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia. Speakers dealt with the history, geography, and colonial legacy of the region, as well as some of the distinctive spiritual practices and sensibilities for which it is now known. We were delighted to learn at the end of March that our project has received support from the Social Science and Humanities Research Council. We look forward to engaging you in conversations about the peculiar history and trajectory of religion in this bio-region over the next four or five years.

As well, we recently installed the professional-grade display cabinet we designed to house the Found in Translation collection of contemporary illustrated or illuminated translations of sacred texts. Having all of the items with us at the CSRS will enable us to seek support for a major conference, research initiative, and public engagement activities related to what ancient texts might mean in the modern (or post-modern) world.

This report provides readers with a good sense of the wide range of scholars whom it has been a great pleasure to host this year. I am always humbled to see people at our social gatherings, daily coffee meetings, public lectures, workshops, or in the CSRS hallways stepping across disciplinary and cultural boundaries to learn, and to help others to understand. It is just one of the ways the CSRS serves as a model for intellectual engagement.

CENTRE CINE

SEASON 2: SEPTEMBER 2016– APRIL 2017

Season two of the Centre Cine series featured six films which explored questions of morality, culture, the search for meaning, arising from the human spiritual journey. The selection, curated by CSRS artist in residence, Terry Marner, included titles such as The Railway Man, Sabah, and Labyrinth of Lies.

Centre Cine participants are sent the name of a selected film each month. They then locate and watch the film in their own time in preparation for an upcoming group discussion. Discussions are held at the CSRS and led by Terry Marner who facilitates the conversation about the film. All films in the series were available on Netflix and most are available from the Greater Victoria Public Library (GVPL) on DVD.

We hope you will join us for Centre Cine's third season coming up in Autumn, 2017. Visit our website to find out more, or email csrs@uvic.ca to sign up for the Centre Cine e-mailing list.

Women, Rights & Religion Conference

AUGUST 31 & SEPTEMBER 1, 2016

The CSRS partnered with University of Calgary Professor, and former Visiting Research fellow, Morny Joy to co-host the SSHRC-funded Women, Rights, and Religion conference.

After two days in Calgary, this group of scholars moved on to Victoria, with the CSRS hosting two-days of intense workshops featuring an international ensemble of scholars, each expert in the field of women and religion. Questions such as What do we understand by rights?, Can there be rights in religion or, Is the binary division, separating rights from religion inevitable? were addressed. Conference participants presented papers on themes related to philosophy; law; Islam and feminism; colonialism; racism, religious aspects of caring, charity, and justice; and women and religious freedom. Public lectures by Tamara Albertini (University of Hawaii at Manoa) and Jonnette Hamilton Watson (University of Calgary) accompanied the event and allowed for broader participation throughout the UVic community.

IDEAFEST 2017

MARCH 9, 2017

WEST COAST ECO-SPIRITUALITY:

RELIGION, REVERANCE, AND REASON IN CASCADIA

The CSRS was pleased to continue its participation in UVic's annual research festival. The 2017 event introduced the audience – including valued members of the CSRS community – to a number of themes that will be explored in the centre's SSHRC-funded research project, Religion, Spirituality, Secularity and Society in the Pacific Northwest in Canada. The event is described below:

Nearly 50 per cent of British Columbians report they have no religion—that's more than twice the share of "nones" than any other region in Canada and higher than anywhere else in North America. The religious and spiritual style of the "Cascadia bio-region" is influenced by its distinctive history, politics and environment and is expressed through such activities as hiking, yoga, mindfulness practices, religious creativity and a reverence for nature. Join local scholars, practitioners and critics of West Coast eco-spirituality to debate, debunk and discover the roots and implications of this unique phenomenon. Moderated by CSRS Director, Paul Bramadat, the dynamic event included the following expert guest panelists:

- Siobhan Chandler (Sociologist of Religion, independent scholar),
- Lynne Marks (UVic History),
- Mike Simpson (UVic Environmental Studies),
- Rev. Canon Bruce Bryant-Scott (Parish of St. Matthias Anglican).

FOUND IN TRANSLATION SOFT LAUNCH

In celebration of the arrival of the custom designed and built Found in Translation (FIT) exhibition display cabinet, the CSRS held a soft-launch of the FIT collection on April 11. The archival case took months to produce from its custom design to fabrication, and weighs in at over 1,100 pounds while still empty.

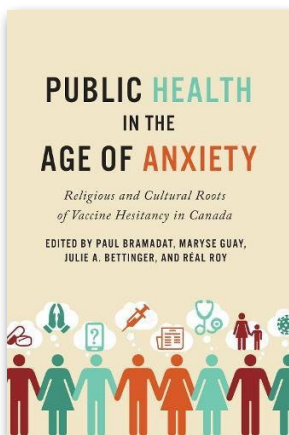

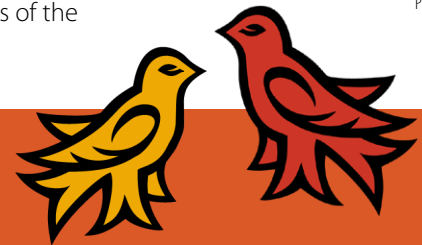

Members of the CSRS community visited the centre to see the Found in Translation collection of modern re-imagined sacred texts. Works featured in the collection range from graphic novels, comics, videos, to book art, and include such notable works as the St. John's Bible Heritage Edition, Sita Sings the Blues, Sandow Birk's American Qur'an, Le Coran: Traduit de l'arabe par Jean Grosjean, Amar Chitra Katha Comics - Ultimate Collection, and the Book of Ruth by artist David Wander.

The FIT collection will be the focus of much upcoming research at the centre, resulting in the production of a manuscript, conference, and exhibition in the upcoming years. Members of the campus community and public are welcome to view the collection by appointment.
