Zaheera Jinnah

Belief and Belonging among Muslims in British Columbia

What do we know about Muslim communities in B.C.? What connections do Muslims have to place? And why does the study of such questions matter? As visible minorities, and members of the fastest growing religion in the country, public perception of Muslims is varied and often problematic. This talk challenges commonly held notions of Muslims in the West, and offers alternate, decolonial ways to understand this spiritual community and their place in B.C.

Zaheera Jinnah is faculty in the School of Social Work, and an associate researcher at the African Centre for Migration and Society, Wits University, South Africa. Her work explores migration, identities and decolonial theory with a special interest in the Global South.
