0.75 Assistant Teaching Professor

2019-20 Limited Term Appointment in Biological Anthropology

The Department of Anthropology, University of Victoria, invites applications for a 0.75 Limited Term position in the area of biological and archaeological anthropology or biological anthropology with a focus on human or primate evolutionary biology and/or ecology. The 9 month appointment, effective September 1, 2019, will come with an obligation to teach a total of six (1.5 unit) courses over the Fall and Spring terms. The position is intended to support our new BSc program in Anthropology and to provide our students with innovative, hands-on learning opportunities.

Specifically, we seek a dynamic instructor who has completed a PhD in Anthropology and has the requisite background to teach courses in the scholar’s area of regional, topical or methodological specialization in biological anthropology. We particularly seek an individual who can offer courses on Human Origins (ANTH 341, 351), courses with a strong method and theory component (e.g., ANTH 395, 452, 485), as well as courses in their own areas of specialization to fulfill major requirements for our undergraduate students (see Anthropology Website) (e.g., ANTH 391). The full list of the department’s courses can be found in the University of Victoria’s Calendar.

Applicants should send syllabi of courses they would be interested in teaching, and a teaching dossier/portfolio that provides evidence of successful university-level teaching to the Chair of Anthropology. Application materials, including a cover letter and CV, as well as the names and contact information of three referees must be received no later than 5 PM PST February 1st. Electronic submissions are welcome: anthone@uvic.ca
