Meet some of our ANTH alumni

Devon Bidal: BSc with Distinction '19: Devon works as a multimedia journalist for Saanich News and Black Press Media. She covers breaking and community news relating to Saanich and Greater Victoria. Aside from writing articles for print and online, as a multimedia journalist, she also shoots photos and video for the company. Devon enjoys spending time in the field interacting with sources in their environment, seeing the region through their eyes and providing a platform for people to share their stories. While journalism isn't typically associated with anthropology, Devon finds she uses the skills taught in the anthropology department on a daily basis. At UVic, Devon studied Anthropology and Journalism. She is proud to have been one of the first two students to graduate with the new Bachelor of Science in Anthropology.

Cynthia Korpan: PhD '19: Cynthia is the Manager of Professional Development Programs at the Division of Learning and Teaching Support and Innovation (LTSI) at UVic. In this role, Cynthia brings her anthropological perspective and skills to the following: curriculum development of all learning and teaching related professional development programming for instructors; instruction of the capstone course in Learning and Teaching in Higher Education (LATHE); a Graduate Certificate program; and research that focuses on the learning process individuals undergo as they first begin teaching in the academic workplace.

Lisa Rogers: MA '18: Lisa is currently the research support clerk for the Indigenous Legal Relations Research Unit within the BC Ministry of Attorney General. She assists the senior researchers by managing an extensive research library and map collection, as well as reviewing and retrieving primary source documents from the BC Archives and other locations. The ethnohistoric research conducted by the unit supports many areas of the government, including negotiations throughout the province.

See more alumni profiles here. Keep in Touch. Email us your journey from degree to career and we would love to include your profile on our website page.
