And thank you to our MA student Lydia Tooreburgh for nominating them.

• Congratulations to our MA student Shane Doddridge (supervised by Dr. Brian Thom) who just won the 2021 Canadian Cartographic Association 'best student presentation' award for his paper ‘Navigating Theory in Toponomy: Approaching Indigenous Place Names in the Chilcotin Region of Canada'. Shane’s collaborative research for his MA with Tsilhqot’in communities on Indigenous place names has been ethnographically exemplary, deeply interdisciplinary, and theoretically rich.

• Dr. Lindsay Der, our sessional instructor, speaks on BBC’s podcast “You’re Dead To Me” discussing the many facets of the Neolithic Revolution as well as the history of Turkey’s famous archaeological site, Çatalhöyük.

• Congratulations to our PhD alumna, Angélique Lalonde, and her debut collection “Glorious Frazzled Beings” being among five authors shortlisted for the $100K 2021 Scotiabank Giller Prize.

• Dr. Brian Thom commented in CBC Daybreak North story on the ongoing conflicts in Wet’suwet’en territory over the Coastal Gas Link pipeline. He comments on how he thinks we will look back on the troubled relationship around archaeological site alternation permitting and to the future of archaeological decision-making and governance as BC and First Nations implement the UNDRIP through the BC DRIPA (at 6 min 15 secs).

• Congratulations to Dr. Alexandrine Boudreault-Fournier and Eleonora Diamanti’s on their article “Sensing the Night: Nocturnal Filmmaking in Guantánamo, Cuba”. Published in Visual Anthropology Review it is now available.
