Course Description

The course will provide a first introduction to the theoretical and methodological foundations of qualitative research in Geography. A range of paradigms (e.g. ethnography and participatory research, action research) and data collection techniques (e.g. interviews, participant observation, focus groups, in-depth interviews) will be examined and applied to issues in human geography and different forms of data analysis will be introduced (e.g. narrative or discourse analysis, coding). Students will be guided in the research process of their own research projects throughout the course. At the end the students will produce a research report and present some of their findings. Due to the specific circumstances given the current pandemic all research will be done online. This is a great opportunity to learn about using the internet to conduct your research.

- Lectures: Online lectures will be held always on Thursdays from 14:30PM to 15:50PM.

- LABs: There will be 6 Lab sessions (Lab 1 to 6). The class will be divided into 2 Lab sections, which means that you will probably be working with a small group of approximately 12 students per section. Labs are scheduled for Section I: Tuesdays 10:30 to 12:20PM and Section II Thursdays 12:30 to 14:20PM. It is mandatory to participate in the Lab sessions.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS AND EVALUATION
Marking Rubrics will be provided for each type of assignment.

I. Research Report (30%)
You will conduct a specific research project focused on the impacts of Covid-19. This year we are experiencing life changing conditions due to the pandemic. This will be our main research topic and all research will be conducted online. Students will be able to define specific subtopics related to the topic and specific research questions according to your interest. Here are just some possible topics:
- How does Covid-19 affect social interaction of Youth?
- What are the impacts of Covid-19 on the elderly, or on specific service sectors?
- What are the impacts of Covid-19 on the environment?
- How do different groups experience the impacts differently?
- What are the energy and climate impacts of the virus?
- What comes after Covid-19?

You can work individually or as a small group with 2 or 3 students. You will work on your research independently or in groups and check in with your Lecturer and Lab instructor on a weekly basis. By week 2 you will have refined your research question, by week 4 your research design should be completed. By week 6 you should be starting to collect your data and begin with the systematization of your material. By week 8 you will initiate your data analysis and in week 10 you will start to write up your results. Finally, in week 13 we will conduct a small online conference with the presentation of your findings. The research report must be less than 3,500 words (bibliography and attachments not included), requiring at least 8 academic references. Specific evaluation criteria will be provided. The finalized version of your report is due at midnight, Dec. 12th.

II. Research Report Outline (5%)
In week 5 (midnight, Oct. 12th), you are required to hand in a draft outline stating your research question and sub-questions, providing a brief rational for your research. Provide some key points on your research design. This includes layout of methods to be used for data collection, participants, how many participants, procedure for participant selection, timeframe, etc. I will provide feedback. The submission of the outline is marked out of 10%.

III. Research Report Presentation (5%)
In week 13, students are required to give a short presentation, showcasing their groups’ research and highlighting some of the findings. Our mini online conference is scheduled for Thursday, Dec. 3rd, between 12:30 PM and 15:50PM. The specific time and the presentation schedule will be announced later in the semester. Please upload a 1-page presentation notes on by Dec. 2nd.
IV. Participation (20 +10%)

Attendance and active engagement in the Thursday class is expected. We will be running several discussion forums, where we pose Questions and ask students to post their answers and/ or comment on other students’ posts. Regular participation in these online activities is expected. In some weeks, we will conduct group discussions on the readings and course materials provided. Your active participation in these activities will be added towards your participation mark.

As part of the Thursday online class we will break up into groups to discuss aspects of the course readings and additional course materials for each week (between Week 3 and Week 11). Each student will be discussion leader once (10% mark). The discussion leader will facilitate the reflections and exchange of ideas among a small group of students. In preparation for this activity this student will work with the course material and formulate 8 questions to be posed to the group. The group will have approximately 20 minutes for discussion. The discussion leaders will then provide a 2 minutes summary of the highlights of the discussion. You have been signed-up for one day to lead the discussion. This activity will count as part of your participation mark.

V. Lab Assignments (30%)

1st Lab Assignment: Oral presentation of research proposals (LAB 3) (week 5)
2nd Lab Assignment Research tool presentation (due in LAB 4) (week 7)
3rd Lab Assignment: Peer review of draft research reports (due in LAB 6) (week 12)
