This book is divided into three sections. The first section, dealing with conceptual issues, contains chapters on tourism trends, attitudes to leisure and tourism, tourism and the resource base, and development patterns in the Laurentians. The second, focused on planning options, includes chapters dealing with government involvement in British Columbia and in Quebec. Chapters that focus on the hotel industry, and on planning in harmony with the host community round out the second section. The final section is concerned with park promotion and planning, Parks Canada, the relationship between tourism and parks, and ski resort development in the Rockies.
