Sea otters, kelp forests, and natural variation:
Some questions of scale

Jane Watson
Biology Faculty, Vancouver Island University

Natural systems can vary widely in space and time. In this era of ever-changing climate, understanding “baseline variation” has become increasingly important. This seminar examines some of the sources of long and short term variation in kelp forest communities along the west coast of Vancouver Island.