INSTRUCTOR: Dr. Garry Gray

Course Description and Objectives

This is an introductory graduate level course in qualitative research methods intended to supply you with both foundational knowledge as well as experience with designing a qualitative project. Given the limitations of time (i.e., one semester) we will cover selected qualitative approaches. Topics may include: academic voice in writing, interviewing techniques, ethics applications, content media analysis, and ethnography/field research. In addition, we may also examine Institutional Ethnography, Structural Analysis of Narratives, and the relationship between Indigenous methodologies and qualitative approaches.

Skills Development

In this course, you will receive training in research design. You will also have the opportunity to lead (through team teaching) a graduate level seminar.

Course Pre/Co-requisites:
