

I am pleased to be standing as a candidate for the Dean of Law Appointment Committee. I am an associate professor in the Faculty of Law, with teaching and research interests in the areas of non-profit law, law and religion, constitutional law, and administrative law. I have worked at the law faculty for almost ten years, and have served on two previous appointment committees. I was an active participant in the faculty's recent discussions about the composition of the Dean of Law Appointment Committee, and about the importance of keeping equity and diversity concerns at the forefront of the faculty's hiring processes.
